

For all the food products, the main variable to control is temperature. With its variation, the bacteria naturally present in food, begin to multiply and so, it is necessary to delay or block its development by refrigerating or frosting the food.